GREAT WAR CENTENARY SERIES

A True Horror of War:

Canadian Army Rations and Food

Preparation During the First World War

It has always been the soldier's right to grouse. Throughout history, many complaints have centered on army food and rations. Tales of terrible, badly prepared food and hunger in the trenches are included in firsthand accounts of the Great War. On the other hand, the achievement of the British and Empire supply system to feed so many soldiers on the Western Front was something of a minor miracle. Join us as local historian David Webb explores the good, the bad, and the inedible during World War I.

MARCH – When Breath Becomes Air By: Paul Kalanithi

At only thirty-six years of age, neurosurgical resident Paul Kalanithi was diagnosed with stage IV lung cancer, and found himself suddenly transformed from doctor to patient. Completed posthumously, this poignant memoir confronts such difficult questions such as: what makes a life worth living in the face of death? What does it mean to bring new life into the world as your own is fading away? When Breath Becomes Air is thought-provoking, heartbreaking, and a life-affirming reflection on the challenge of facing our own mortality.

APRIL – Where Am I Now? By: Mara Wilson

Mara Wilson has always felt a little young and a little out of place: as the only child on a film set full of adults, the first daughter in a house full of boys, the sole clinically depressed member of the cheerleading squad, and one of the few former child actors who has never been in jail or rehab. This book tells the story of one young woman's journey from accidental fame to relative (but happy) obscurity and it also illuminates a universal struggle -- learning to accept yourself, and figuring out who you are and where you belong.
